II.2.4) Description of the procurement:

Public procurement on smart emergency call and response solution is planned to be announced in the first half of 2022.

By initiating a market consultation VULSK would like to alert the market about the innovative requirements for a smart emergency call and response solution that improves the management of life-threatening emergencies, leading to better patient outcomes and staff experience, prior to any potential procurement process. We are interested in ideas, information, new concepts that could meet at least one or more functional requirements of the system:

- 24/7 alert pathway informing the most appropriate medical specialist of the nature and location of the emergency and directing them to where they are needed, minimizing delays in the response time and avoiding the duplication of response;
- a feedback mechanism on the call response for those in the emergency situation and for the emergency responders;
- data collation and analysis of the emergency call and response events to support ongoing learning and further improvements in the system, clinical practice, patient outcomes and utilisation of staff resources and wellbeing.

VULSK is not the only one in facing this situation. Our research indicates that many hospitals in Lithuania and across Europe have not yet established effective, informative and reliable emergency call and response solutions.

VULSK invite potential suppliers and other interested parties to participate at the market consultation, present their products and services, cooperate and help to prepare for the public procurement of innovation.

We look forward to receiving interest and suggestions from all potential suppliers: manufacturers, solution architects and designers, innovators, scientists and consultants.

You can find more detailed information about the requirements for smart emergency call and response system in Lithuanian and English on the CVP IS system (in the Procurement Documents section) and on the VULSK page.
